

The Williams research group is expected to have 1 or 2 openings for graduate students in the Summer or Fall of 2014. One project involves characterizing the electronic properties of single molecules with atomic spatial resolution. The molecular orbitals will be imaged and characterized by atomic force microscopy methods developed in the Williams group (NSF funds pending). There may also be available funds to support a graduate student who will perform research to detect a single electron spin.